

Bernard K. Mensah

Ghanaian-British children's author | Founder, Haberman Nerds Press

Bernard K. Mensah is a Ghanaian-British children's author whose stories invite young readers into worlds of adventure, imagination and belonging. He grew up in Ghana and now lives in the United Kingdom with his two sons.

His books include Esi the Brave (Who Was Not Afraid of Anything), Jollof Day and Kente for Jojo, alongside the Kwame's Magic Quest series for emerging readers. Esi the Brave received starred reviews from Kirkus Reviews and Shelf Awareness, and Kente for Jojo received a starred Kirkus review. His work is published by imprints including Dial Books and Knopf Books for Young Readers, as well as Scholastic.

Bernard is the founder of Haberman Nerds Press, an African-owned publisher championing African stories and talent. Through his writing and publishing work, he wants children to encounter African characters, cultures and imaginations at the heart of their stories.

He also works in software engineering. For schools, libraries and festivals, his visits bring together expressive storytelling, conversation and opportunities for children to develop their own ideas. Find books, resources and visit enquiries at bernard.ink.

Meet Bernard; invite a conversation

Books and visits: bernard.ink | Media enquiries: booksbybernardkmensah.co.uk/contact

Literary representation: Natalie M. Lakosil, Looking Glass Literary and Media.